

One of the pillars of OOP – Inheritance

Inheritance is when a class inherits behaviors and methods from a parent class or an interface.

Its primary purpose is to reusing the codes that require the same behaviors and to override the methods as needed without changing the behavior of the parent classes in the heirachy.